ILPA submission on the Immigration and Social Security Co-ordination (EU Withdrawal) Bill – Public Bill Committee stage

Background

1. The Immigration Law Practitioners’ Association (ILPA) is a professional association founded in 1984, the majority of whose members are barristers, solicitors and advocates practising in all aspects of immigration, asylum and nationality law. Academics, non-governmental organisations and individuals with a substantial interest in the law are also members. ILPA exists to promote and improve advice and representation in immigration, asylum and nationality law, to act as an information and knowledge resource for members of the immigration law profession and to help ensure a fair and human rights-based immigration and asylum system.

Introduction

2. In summary, ILPA’s concerns on the Bill are:
   a. Paragraph 6 of Schedule 1 is unclear and potentially repeals vital legal protections. It should be amended so that the provisions the government intends to disapply are stated on the face of the Bill.
   b. Clause 2 of the Bill should be brought into line with the government’s policy in relation to deportation of Irish citizens.
   c. Clause 2 of the Bill should make clear that Irish citizens born in Northern Ireland may not be deported or excluded from the UK.
   d. The Bill must contain safeguards to the power in clause 4, given the wide range of other powers available to ministers already in this area and the risk for abuse.
   e. The government should omit clause 5 on the co-ordination of social security and bring forward primary legislation to make any changes.

3. At paragraph 31 below we have provided proposed draft amendments.

Legal protections at risk because of uncertainty

4. While the Bill is supposed to provide for the ending of free movement, we are concerned that paragraph 6 of Schedule 1 of the Bill potentially disapplies any retained EU law as it relates to the immigration context. This could lead to repeal of legal protections far beyond the realm of free movement.
5. After the end of the transition, EU law is “retained” in domestic law through a variety of methods in the EU (Withdrawal) Act 2018 (the “2018 Act”). Of importance to the Immigration Bill is that any powers, liabilities, obligations, restrictions, remedies and procedures which we had available to be enforced in the UK because of EU law are carried over by section 4 of the 2018 Act. This would include provisions such as treaties and directives where they are directly effective, and notably includes the anti-trafficking Directive 2011/36/EU.

6. However, s4(2)(b) of the 2018 Act limits the enforceability of directives to the extent that “retained EU law” is only those rights, powers, liabilities, obligations, restrictions, remedies or procedures arising under an EU directive that are of a kind that have been recognised by the European Court or any court or tribunal in the United Kingdom in a case decided before the end of the transition period.

7. Paragraph 6 of Schedule 1 of the Immigration Bill makes a dent in the EU law retained by virtue of s.4 of the 2018 Act. The provision has the effect that, even though those provisions might have been partially saved by the 2018 Act, those provisions actually do not apply to the extent that they are:
   a. inconsistent with, or are otherwise capable of affecting the interpretation, application or operation of, any provision made by or under the Immigration Acts; or
   b. otherwise capable of affecting the exercise of functions in connection with immigration.

8. This is extremely broad. The phrase “functions in connection with immigration” could, on a reasonable interpretation, relate to almost any aspect of immigration control within the UK. The provision is then broadened even further when paired with the test of “capable of affecting”. As well as being broad, the language lacks sufficient objective parameters to be able to ascertain its intended targets. Expert immigration practitioners agree it is impossible to predict with accuracy all the areas of retained EU law it could affect.

9. This raises fundamental rule of law concerns: migrants, their representatives, Home Office caseworkers and judges must be able to ascertain with a reasonable degree of certainty what the law is. We do not believe that this provision meets that standard.

10. Our preliminary research has identified that the following legal protections, which do not relate to free movement, are at risk of being disapplied in any context relating to immigration:
   a. Protections for victims of trafficking in the anti-trafficking Directive 2011/36/EU, for example the protection against removal of a victim of trafficking because they never received sufficient support and assistance under Article 11, or because an investigation was never conducted, or the protection against removal during their reflection and recovery period.
   b. Protections for asylum seekers in the Reception Conditions Directive 2013/33/EU.

11. We wish to make clear that we cannot be sure, at this stage, whether or not these protections are at risk. The only way to know for certain whether or not a provision remains UK law or not is to test the matter in the courts. But to subject the withdrawal of such fundamental rights to this level of uncertainty is deeply unsatisfactory.

12. These protections are potentially at risk as collateral damage to the ending of free movement. We do not understand the government as intending to repeal these provisions. But if this is not their intention, then they must explain why they fall within the scope of the Bill as currently drafted.

13. While paragraphs 68 and 69 of the explanatory notes provide an indication of what the government intends to target with this provision, the list at paragraph 69 is stated to be “non-exhaustive”. It is obviously the case that the government needs to repeal the operation of some of the directly effective treaties in the immigration context for the purposes of ending free movement. However, our concern is that the provision goes much further than that because of its lack of clarity. This is bad rule-making and the government has failed to provide any justification for why it is necessary.

14. The government has other options open to it. One way of protecting the provisions in the directives cited above, while at the same time accommodating for the government’s list of proposed targets in the explanatory notes, would be to provide that paragraph 6 of Schedule 1 does not affect directives which form part of our retained EU law. If the government has directives it does intend to repeal in domestic law, these can be listed as exceptions. We have suggested a potential amendment to this effect below.

Recommendation 1: We recommend that paragraph 6 of Schedule 1 is amended so that it does not apply to directives.

Protections against deportation for Irish citizens

15. Since 2007, the UK government’s policy position is to deport Irish citizens only:

a. where a court has recommended deportation in sentencing; or

b. where the Secretary of State concludes, due to the exceptional circumstances of the case, the public interest requires deportation.

16. This is to reflect the special status Irish citizens have in the UK because of “close historical, community and political ties between the United Kingdom and Ireland, along with the existence of the common travel area”.¹

17. However, this position is merely a matter of executive policy: it is not protected in any primary or secondary legislation, which currently permits deportation of Irish citizens in...

a broader range of circumstances, circumscribed by EU law relating to free movement.² When the EU law protections against deportation are switched off by this Bill, there will be no law to stop a future government from reversing its position on deportation of Irish nationals, given that the domestic law would allow it to do so. The policy position, however, is totally separate from the UK’s membership of the EU: there is no democratic basis on which to remove these legal protections when free movement is switched off.

18. The government has expressed no intention to depart from the policy position, and so it is unclear why the opportunity has not been taken to incorporate the greater protective status for Irish citizens into law. During the passage of the equivalent version of the Bill in the Parliamentary Session of 2017-2019, the minister at the time never explained why this was the case. The position is particularly confusing given that the government has taken steps to remove Irish citizens from the automatic deportation regime (including when an individual is sentenced to at least 12 months’ imprisonment) and could easily have done so for the rest of the regime.³ Rather than correcting the legal position, clause 2(2) of the Bill has the effect of weakening the legal protections for Irish citizens because it fails to put in place a replacement for the safety net EU law offered.

Recommendation 2: ILPA therefore proposes amending clause 2(2) of the Bill to bring it into line with the current policy in relation to Irish citizens and ensuring that policy is secured elsewhere in immigration law.

19. The Good Friday Agreement envisages that Irish citizens who are from Northern Ireland should not, as a matter of law, be able to be excluded or deported from the United Kingdom at all. This position is not currently reflected in UK immigration law. This Bill is a missed opportunity to implement the Good Friday Agreement.

20. Because British citizens cannot be excluded or deported from the United Kingdom, there is a risk that, when an Irish citizen from Northern Ireland is threatened with deportation, they will be forced to assert British citizenship in order to continue to live in Northern Ireland. This goes against the terms and spirit of Article 1(iv) of the Good Friday Agreement, which allows all people of Northern Ireland to remain on the territory, whether or not they identify as Irish, British or both.

Recommendation 3: We recommend that clause 2 be amended to clarify that those people of Northern Ireland entitled to identify as Irish citizens under Article 1(vi) of the Good Friday Agreement may not be deported or excluded from the United Kingdom.

Unclear basis for broad delegated powers in clause 4

The provisions are drafted more widely than they need to be

21. Clause 4 of the Bill confers an extremely wide power on the Home Secretary to make whatever legal amendments s/he “considers appropriate in consequence of, or in connection with, any provision of” the immigration part of the Bill. This includes the ability to amend primary legislation.

22. We recognise the government’s stated intention behind the clause is to ensure coherence across the statute book following the substantial changes brought about the ending of free movement. However, our concern is that clause 4(4) is drafted so widely that it could relate to almost any aspect of immigration law in the UK, which has the potential to engage a large variety of human rights issues. Given there is no time restriction on the clause, the concern is that there is potential for the power to be abused beyond the government’s intentions.

The reasons given in the past for the powers no longer apply

23. During the passage of the Bill under the previous government, the minister set out a number of reasons why the powers in clause 4 and specifically clause 4(4) were necessary. However, in the time since then, almost all of these reasons have been rendered irrelevant because of the passage of primary and secondary legislation. We have provided below a table of the reasons the minister gave alongside an explanation of the current status of the issue the minister identifies.

amendments in relation to the deportation thresholds. Given these Regulations were made under the EU(W)A 2018, it is unclear why a further power is necessary in the Bill.

“without the power in the clause we cannot deliver the future system”

It is unclear why this is the case. The minister herself made clear the system will be delivered through the Immigration Rules.

“to ensure our laws work coherently once we have left the EU” and gives as a specific example section 126 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 and the need to ensure there is no longer a reference to applications under the Immigration (EEA) Regulations 2016.

The Immigration, Nationality and Asylum (EU Exit) Regulations 2019 makes sweeping changes to a huge amount of primary and secondary legislation to ensure this coherence. Reg.12(3) makes the specific change to the 2002 Act to which the minister refers.

The Home Secretary has powers under other provisions to achieve the same goals

24. The explanatory notes at paragraph 37 state that the Home Secretary needs the power in clause 4 in order to make provision in order to protect “the EEA citizen spouse of a British citizen who does not have comprehensive sickness insurance and who is not otherwise exercising Treaty rights, such as the right to work, and who is therefore not technically exercising EU free movement rights”. However, it is unclear why the Home Secretary could not make provision in respect of this type of person under s7(1)(b)-(d) EU(WA)A 2020.

Recommendation 4: We therefore believe that the Bill must contain safeguards to the power in clause 4, given the wide range of other powers available to ministers already in this area and the risk for abuse.

Unnecessary powers in relation to social security co-ordination

25. Clause 5 of the Bill confers a power on an appropriate authority (ministers, or devolved authorities in Scotland and Northern Ireland) to amend social security-related retained direct EU legislation and primary legislation.

26. The law that the clause refers to is the provision made in EU Regulation 883/2004 (and others), currently directly applicable in the UK, for the co-ordination of social security, healthcare, and pension provision for people who move from one EU state to another (or to the UK) and who are publicly insured (by way of national insurance contributions and similar) as regards these areas of ordinary life. It allows contributions to be aggregated so that pensions earned in more than one state may be drawn in the country they currently live in, provides access to public healthcare without charge to the person concerned, and facilitates access to contribution-based social security benefits.
27. Since the UK left the EU on 31 January 2020, the relevant EU regulations pertaining to social security, pensions, and healthcare, have been retained in UK law by section 3 of the European Union (Withdrawal) Act 2018. That Act already contains a power in section 8 to modify retained direct EU law. Further, the government has already exercised this power and amended the Co-ordinating Regulations in the Social Security Coordination (Regulation (EC) No 883/2004, EEA Agreement and Swiss Agreement (Amendment) (EU Exit) Regulations 2019.

28. The proposed power in clause 5 of the Bill is therefore unnecessary. Any changes that do not fall within the scope of the power in section 8 of the 2018 Act must, necessarily, not relate to any ability for the law to operate effectively or to any deficiency in EU law. That being so, the case for such changes to be brought forward in Parliament by primary legislation is overwhelming.

29. In addition, the Secretary of State has further powers as regards social security, healthcare, and pension rights for those who are protected by the Withdrawal Agreement. Section 5 of the European Union (Withdrawal Agreement) Act 2020 inserts section 7A into the 2018 Act so as to secure Withdrawal Agreement rights in domestic law. That protection is buttressed by section 13 of the 2020 Act, which confers a power to make regulations in respect of social security co-ordination rights protected by the Withdrawal Agreement.

30. The Secretary of State already has two sets of powers to make regulations in this area. She has not shown why these powers, which are very broad in scope, are inadequate. There is no proper justification for adding a third set of powers. Good administration requires that the statute book not be littered with unnecessary, duplicating powers that bypass the need for primary legislation.

Recommendation 5: Clause 5 of the Bill should simply be omitted. It is not needed. There is no justification for it.

Suggested amendments

31. We propose the following amendments to the Bill:

Proposed amendment to paragraph 6 of Schedule 1

Draft amendment

Schedule 1, page 8, line 31, at end insert --

“(aa) do not arise under an EU directive (including as applied by the EEA agreement), and”

Explanation

This amendment would ensure that paragraph 6 of Schedule 1 does not affect rights arising under EU directives, such as the EU Anti-Trafficking Directive (2011/36/EC).
Draft amendment
Schedule 1, page 8, line 35, at end insert –
“(4) In sub-paragraph (2)(b), “EU directive” has the meaning in section 20(1) European Union (Withdrawal) Act 2018”

Explanation
This amendment is consequential on the amendment above.

Proposed amendment to clause 2

Draft amendment:
In Clause 2(2), in Section 3ZA, insert
“(6) The Secretary of State may not conclude that the deportation of an Irish citizen is conducive to the public good under section 3(5)(a) unless s/he concludes that, due to the exceptional circumstances of the case, the public interest requires deportation.
(7) No person of any nationality is liable for deportation under section 3(5)(b) where they belong to the family of an Irish citizen who is or has been ordered to be deported, unless subsection (6) is satisfied in respect of that Irish citizen.
(8) An Irish citizen may not be deported or excluded from the United Kingdom if:
(a) the Irish citizen was born in Northern Ireland; and
(b) at the time of the Irish citizen’s birth, at least one of his or her parents was:
   (i) a British citizen; or
   (ii) an Irish citizen; or
   (iii) a British citizen and an Irish citizen; or
   (iv) otherwise entitled to reside in Northern Ireland without any restriction on their period of residence.”

Explanation
To protect in statute the threshold for deportation of Irish citizens currently only applied as a matter of executive policy. To ensure that this extends to family members who may be liable to deportation together with the Irish citizen. To ensure that the people of Northern Ireland may not be deported.

Proposed amendments to clause 4

Restricting breadth of power
Draft amendment:
In clause 4, page 2, line 34, leave out “appropriate” and insert “necessary”.

Explanation
This amendment would ensure that the Secretary of State may only make regulations which are necessary rather than those which she considers appropriate.

Draft amendment
In clause 4, page 2, line 34, leave out “, or in connection with,”

Explanation
This amendment would narrow the scope of the Secretary of State’s powers under clause 4 to make regulations only in consequence of any provision of Part 1.
Draft amendment
In clause 4, page 3, line 3, leave out from “, immediately” to “without leave” and insert “may be granted leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom by virtue of residence scheme immigration rules and who do not have such leave.”

Explanation
This amendment would bring clause 4 into line with European Union (Withdrawal Agreement) Act 2020, section 7.

Draft amendment
In clause 4, page 3, line 5, at end insert—
“(4A) In subsection (1), “residence scheme immigration rules” has the meaning in section 17(1) of the European Union (Withdrawal Agreement) Act 2020.

Explanation
This amendment is consequential on the above amendment.

Parliamentary scrutiny of regulations

Draft amendment
In clause 4, page 3, line 9, leave out subsection (6).

Explanation
This amendment would strengthen the scrutiny of regulations by removing the “made affirmative” procedure.

Draft amendment
In clause 4, page 3, line 14, leave out “other”.

Explanation
This amendment is consequential on the above amendment.

Draft amendment
In clause 4, page 3, line 19, leave out “or (7) “

Explanation
This amendment is consequential on the above amendment.

Draft amendment
In clause 4, page 3, line 21, leave out subsection (9).

Explanation
This amendment is consequential on the above amendment.

Draft amendment
In clause 4, page 3, line 25, leave out subsection (10).

Explanation
This amendment is consequential on the above amendment.
Sunset clause (amendment to clause 8 in respect of the clause 4 power)

Draft amendment
In clause 8, page 5, line 40, at end insert—
“(5) The Secretary of State may no longer exercise the power to make regulations under section 4(1) from the day after the day specified as the deadline under section 7(1)(a) of the European Union (Withdrawal Agreement) Act 2020”.

Explanation
This amendment would put a sunset clause on the Secretary of State’s power to make regulations under section 4 so that it would expire on the day after the deadline for applications to the EU settlement scheme.

Proposed amendment to clause 5

Draft amendment
Omit clause 5 from the Bill

Explanation
This amendment would mean that any new policies on social security coordination arising out of further negotiations with the EU are placed in primary rather than secondary legislation.
